System Status Webpage
Since March 15, 2012, information regarding System Status has been available on the CBOE, C2, CBSX and CFE (collectively, "Exchange") Websites. The System Status Page reflects the current status of Exchange trading systems. The System Status Page also includes information and updates in relation to topics such as: self-help declarations, series halts and class halts. Information concerning Exchange outstanding system issues is also posted on the System Status Page. Furthermore, the System Status Page has search functionality, so users can retrieve past system status postings.

The System Status Page is accessible through a link at the top of each of the home pages of the CBOE Website at http://www.cboe.com/, the C2 Website at http://www.c2exchange.com/, the CBSX Website at http://www.cbsx.com/, and the CFE Website at http://cfe.cboe.com/.

What is RSS?
Really Simple Syndication (RSS) is a method for sharing web content such as headlines, alerts, etc., real-time. RSS feeds are generated systematically, highlighting current material. RSS feeds are intended to generally replace the need to repeatedly check a webpage for updates.

How do I use RSS?
To make use of RSS, you'll need an RSS reader, or aggregator. An RSS reader/aggregator can be a stand-alone application, or a plug-in for another program you already use, such as Microsoft Outlook. Some web browsers, such as Firefox and Safari RSS, have built in RSS readers. There are also online aggregators, websites such as My Yahoo or Bloglines that allow you to customize them by adding RSS feeds. Find a downloadable RSS aggregator.
